Communicative English for B.Sc. Nursing students is a fundamental course for a nurse to learn how to communicate with the patients, doctors and foreigners in health services. Proficiency in English language plays a vital role in medical and health unit for communication while interacting with patients. Therefore, this book Part-A has been prepared as per revised new syllabus of INC, New Delhi for first semester of 1st Year B.Sc. Nursing, with a view to enrich and equip the student entering college; resourcing with the object to enhance the communication skills in English by providing an adequate opportunities to practice.

The main aim of this book in to able students enhance their ability to comprehend spoken and written English, which are required for effective communication in nursing profession and also develop verbal and written English during clinical and classroom experiences. Much efforts has been taken and described the communication skills how to develop by implementing L-S-R-G-W method, speaking and reading techniques and also to improve vocabulary in easy ways. The skills in taking notes from patients and to write different types of reports including legal are elaborately explained. Methods of applying skills in combination of critical thinking strategies and to enhance expressions through writing skills are described. The required methods are explained how to apply LSRW skills to improve the capability of the nursing students, to cater the needs in healthcare unit.

In Part-B of this book, grammatical parts have been explained with illustrations, which will help the nursing students to enhance their language ability and boost their confidence to construct sentences and phrases individually without grammatical errors. Certainly this English Text book is the best tool in the hands of aspiring learners which suits the needs of inspiring nursing students ever not only in real life, but also in practical nursing practice.
